Description:

Native flora and fauna will be decimated in the long term. Using the bush assists with reduction of weeds, fire fuel loads and feral animals. There is nothing wrong with using sustainable resources. Small country communities depend on some of these sustainable managed industries. If not, imported non sustainable harvested timber is likely. As a country we have one of the most horrific native animal extinction rates, excluding hunting of feral dogs, cats and foxes will cause significant harm to native animals. Similarly not hunting deer, feral goats and pigs will assist with the spread of weeds. All Australians need to care for the bush while they use it. Responsibly harvesting firewood from the keeps fuel loads down, keeps people warm. Converting state forrests or any park into a national park is dangerous to humans and native animals.
