Hi,

Please don't turn the Wombat State Forest (or any other state forest for that matter) in to a National Park. It is not fair that people who want to use these wonderful public spaces cannot just so the inner city greenies / people who never would go near them anyway can sit there stroking themselves at just how wonderful all of this locked up land is.

Parks are certainly important for some areas, particularly where there might be rare or threatened flora / fauna or areas that are otherwise culturally or historically significant. The rest of the land should be publicly accessible.

Thanks for your time.

Kind regards,

Kevin.
